Ayers won't be Trump's chief of staff

WASHINGTON (Reuters) – Nick Ayers, Donald Trump's top choice to be his next chief of staff, is no longer in the running and the president is now considering other candidates, sources familiar with the matter said on Sunday, the latest sign of a chaotic White House staff shake-up.

Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Republican Rep. Mark Meadows, chairman of the right-wing House Freedom Caucus, are among the possible contenders to replace current White House chief of staff John Kelly, one source told Reuters.

Nick Ayers

Ayers, 36, chief of staff to Vice President Mike Pence and known as a skilled Republican political tactician, had been in discussions for months about taking the job, but was unable to agree to terms with Trump, another source said.

Ayers tweeted that he would instead be leaving the White House soon, apparently to return to his home state of Georgia. One of the sources said Ayers would return to "America First Policies," a combative group that he helped found before joining Pence in the White House.

"I will be departing at the end of the year but will work with the #MAGA team to advance the cause," he wrote on Twitter, in a reference to Trump's slogan, "Make America Great Again."

One source said Trump had sought a two-year commitment from Ayers but that he was unable to agree to that. Ayers, the father of young triplets, was willing to serve only until the spring of 2019 for family reasons, an administration official said earlier.

Evidence: Russians interacted with at least 14 Trump associates

By Rosalind S. Helderman, Tom Hamburger and Carol D. Leonnig
The Washington Post

The Russian ambassador. A deputy prime minister. A pop star, a weightlifter, a lawyer, a Soviet army veteran with alleged intelligence ties.

Again and again and again, over the course of Donald Trump's 18-month campaign for the presidency, Russian citizens made contact with his closest family and friends, as well as figures on the periphery of his orbit.

Some offered to help his campaign and his real estate business. Some offered dirt on his Democratic opponent. Repeatedly, Russian nationals suggested Trump should hold a peacemaking sit-down with Vladimir Putin – and offered to broker such a summit.

In all, Russians interacted with at least 14 Trump associates during the campaign and presidential transition, public records and interviews show.

'Extremely unusual'

"It is extremely unusual," said Michael McFaul, who served as ambassador to Russia under President Barack Obama. "Both the number of contacts and the nature of the contacts are extraordinary."

As special counsel Robert Mueller slowly unveils the evidence that he has gathered since his appointment in May 2017, he has not yet shown that any of the dozens of interactions between people in Trump's orbit and Russians resulted in any specific coordination between his presidential campaign and Russia.

But the mounting number of communications that have been revealed occurred against the backdrop of "sustained efforts by the Russian government to interfere with the U.S. presidential election," as Mueller's prosecutors wrote in a court filing last week.

The special counsel's filings have also revealed moments when Russia appeared to be taking cues from Trump. In July 2016, the then-GOP candidate said at a news conference, "Russia, if you're listening, I hope you're able to find the 30,000 emails that are missing," referring to messages Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton had deleted from a private account. That day, the Russians made their first effort to break into servers used by Clinton's personal office, according to court documents.

As Americans began to grip the reality that a hostile foreign power took active steps to shape the outcome of the race, Trump and his advisers asserted they had no contact with Russia.

Two days after Trump was elected president, a top Kremlin official caused a stir by asserting that Trump's associates were in contact with the Russian government before the election.

"I don't say that all of them, but a whole array of them supported contacts with Russian representatives," Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov told the Interfax news agency on Nov. 10, 2016.

The claim was met with a hail of denials. Hope Hicks, then Trump's top spokeswoman, responded, "It never happened. There was no communication between the campaign and any foreign entity during the campaign."

Winter storm knocks out power to 380K in Southeast

(Reuters) – A powerful winter storm that hit the U.S. Southeast over the weekend knocked out power for more than 380,000 customers and forced the cancellation of hundreds of flights on Sunday.

Authorities urged residents to stay off the roads as snow, sleet and freezing rain were expected to continue through Sunday night and into Monday morning, the National Weather Service said.

The agency reported between four and 12 inches of snow in some areas and warned about continuing snowfalls that could bring as much as a foot and a half from western and northern North Carolina to southwest Virginia.

More than 380,000 customers were without power in the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Virginia on Sunday afternoon, Poweroutage.us reported.

The storm prompted more than 1,000 flight cancellations at Charlotte/Douglas International Airport, the sixth-busiest airport in the country, and other airports across the region, according to flight-tracking website FlightAware.

North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper said Sunday that the state of emergency would remain in effect and that the North Carolina National Guard had been activated to help with the response.

The effects of the storm could last for days in the state, officials warned.

In North Raleigh, residents woke up to several inches of snow that blanketed roads, cars and homes. Many people took to Twitter to share photos of the unusually harsh weather, and the hashtag #Snowmageddon2018 was trending on Twitter on Sunday.

US diplomats hold talks with Taliban on ending Afghan war

By Sayed Salahuddin
The Washington Post

KABUL, Afghanistan – U.S. diplomats held talks with Taliban delegates Monday in the United Arab Emirates to discuss ways to end the war in Afghanistan, a Taliban spokesman and Afghan government officials said.

Saudi, Pakistani and UAE officials also were participating in the meeting, one of several held between U.S. diplomats and representatives of the Afghan insurgent group in recent months, Taliban spokesman Zabiullah Mujahid said in a statement emailed to reporters.

Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and the UAE were the only nations that recognized the Taliban's radical Islamist government when it ruled Afghanistan from 1996 until its ouster in late 2001.

There was no official confirmation from the presidential palace in Kabul whether any government official would participate in the meeting. But Afghanistan's national security adviser, Hamdullah Mohib, said in a tweet that he met Sunday in the UAE with officials from the three countries and the United States.

Mohib said he discussed President Ashraf Ghani's road map for peace, which allows Taliban representatives to take part in the political process and run for office.

Erdogan renews threat to attack Kurds in US-controlled territory

By Karen DeYoung and Missy Ryan
The Washington Post

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan escalated his threats Monday of a military attack on U.S.-controlled territory in northeastern Syria, while the U.S. military insisted that the two countries were "making progress" in resolving their differences.

Erdogan said that President Donald Trump had "responded positively" in a Friday telephone call to one Turkish demand – that U.S.-allied Syrian Kurdish forces be moved out of the Syrian town of Manbij. But Erdogan said that Turkish operations farther to the east, where Kurdish fighters occupy a series of Syrian border towns, were ready to start "at any moment now."

Turkey, Erdogan said during a speech in central Konya province, would act "without harming the U.S. soldiers" in border observation posts and interspersed among the Kurdish fighters.

Defense Department spokesman Sean Robertson declined to discuss "operational details" of any U.S. or Kurdish military movements in response to the Turkish threats. He referred questions about the Trump-Erdogan telephone call to the White House.

'In close consultation'

A senior White House official, speaking on the condition of anonymity under ground rules set by the administration, said that "the United States and Turkey remain in close consultation at the highest levels regarding the security situation in northern Syria."

ERDOGAN: Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan at the Presidential palace in Ankara, Turkey, on July 9.
Arif Akdogan/Bloomberg

Turkey considers the Kurds of the People's Protection Units, known as the YPG, who have been instrumental as U.S.-equipped forces in the defeat of the Islamic State in Syria, to be terrorists allied with Turkish separatists. As they have taken territory, politicians affiliated with the Kurdish fighters have set up interim government structures in largely Arab areas.

Turkey's demands have posed a conundrum for the administration, which has said that it is close to defeating the militants but that its campaign against them would suffer without the Kurdish forces who have done most of the fighting on the ground. At the same time, U.S. officials have said they value Turkey as a NATO ally and are trying to address its complaints.

The two governments "are coordinating actively on all issues affecting both Turkish security and the situation in northeast Syria," Pentagon spokesman Eric Pahon said.

A Defense official noted that Turkey had amassed more military forces along the border, along with Syrian fighters who share its desire to oust the Kurds. The U.S. military is concerned that these fighters, which it refers to as TSO, for Turkey Supported Opposition, may not be wholly under Turkish control, said the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to candidly discuss the situation.

Last week, as Turkish jets bombed positions of Turkish Kurds in northern Iraq near the Syrian border, and Ankara threatened operations in Syria, the Defense Department warned that "unilateral military action into northeast Syria by any party, particularly as U.S. personnel may be present or in the vicinity, is of grave concern. We would find any such actions unacceptable," said a statement issued by spokesman Sean Robertson.

Meanwhile, Turkish Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu said that Trump had also told Erdogan at the Group of 20 summit in Argentina early this month that his administration was "working on" the extradition of Turkish cleric Fethullah Gulen.

Facing opposition, UK's May will bring Brexit deal back to parliament

By Kylie MacLellan and Elizabeth Piper
Reuters

LONDON – Prime Minister Theresa May said on Monday she would bring her Brexit deal back to parliament for a mid-January vote, pledging to get assurances from the European Union before then to break a deadlock over Britain's fraught efforts to quit the bloc.

With just over 100 days until Britain is due to leave the EU, May faced accusations from some lawmakers that she was trying to force a deeply divided parliament into backing her deal by running down the clock to exit day.

A mid-January vote could oblige lawmakers to make a decision between her deal or leaving without one on March 29, a nightmare scenario for many businesses.

May is pressing on with her deal to leave the EU, rejecting calls for a second referendum or to test support for different Brexit options in parliament, despite hardening opposition to the agreement to maintain close ties.

She said parliament would debate the deal in January, before a vote in the week beginning Jan. 14 – more than a month after an original Dec. 11 vote, which she canceled after admitting she faced a significant defeat.

After a tumultuous week in which she survived a confidence vote within her Conservative Party and sought last-minute changes to the Brexit agreement reached with Brussels last month, May said again that the alternatives to her deal were leaving without an agreement or no Brexit at all.

"I know this is not everyone's perfect deal. It is a compromise. But if we let the perfect be the enemy of the good then we risk leaving the EU with no deal," she told lawmakers, her speech punctuated by loud shouts of protest.

Catalan lingers as Spain elections loom

(Bloomberg) – Catalan nationalism is the cause that keeps dividing Spain as the country faces its third election in less than four years.

Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez is set to call a snap vote on Friday after parliament exposed the dwindling authority of his minority government by rejecting his budget plan in a vote Wenesday. Talks with Catalan independence parties broke down last week, leaving him short of the support he needed to pass his spending plan for 2019.

Tensions in Catalonia have been simmering ever since separatist groups attempted to engineer a split from Spain at the end of 2017 in defiance of the constitution. As Sanchez weighs his options for calling elections, he will be conscious how the regional conflict continues to influence the national political scene in ways he may find hard to predict.

CATALAN INDEPENDENCE AN ISSUE: Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez in parliament in Madrid, Spain, Feb. 12. Angel Navarrete/Bloomberg

> "The Catalan crisis is an open issue. And it's a very fruitful issue for the right."
> – Ignacio Jurado, analyst with Quantio

"The Catalan crisis is an open issue," Ignacio Jurado, an analyst with political risk consulting firm Quantio in Madrid, said. "And it's a very fruitful issue for the right."

Since taking office last June, Sanchez has made making peace with Catalan nationalists a cornerstone of his domestic policy, claiming Spain will emerge stronger from efforts to rebuild relations with the region following the conflicts of 2017.

Even so, the tactic has always been tinged with pragmatism: with just 84 deputies in the 350-seat chamber, his Socialist government was always going to need the votes of Catalan separatist parties to pass key legislation.

Sanchez had snatched power last year by persuading a loose coalition that included the separatists to oust his predecessor Mariano Rajoy in a no-confidence vote following a string of graft revelations. Still, the secession issue reared its head again this week as a trial of Catalan politicians accused of rebellion against Spain during 2017's bid for independence got underway in Madrid.

Sanchez's overtures to Catalonia have enraged many Spaniards who believe the Catalans should be punished, not wooed.

A proposal last week by Sanchez's administration to have a mediator help guide conversations between the government and Catalan officials triggered a furious backlash from opposition parties and opened up rifts within the Socialist party.

Government officials said they were putting talks with Catalan leaders on hold but opposition leaders sought to harness the rage of conservative Spain by holding a rally in Madrid on Sunday in favor of national unity. A widely circulated photo from the event showed the leaders of the People's Party, Ciudadanos and Vox standing together, in what could have been a dress rehearsal for Spain's next government.

The fact that the government was unable to get its budget approved is proof that there was no secret pact with Catalan nationalists, Budget Minister Maria Jesus Montero said on Thursday.

"The vote highlighted the lies that had been said that there had been concessions, blackmail, secret pacts with the independence parties," Montero said.

Without a budget, the government can only continue to operate for a short time, Montero said. It's not a question of if Sanchez will curtail his term by calling an early vote but when in 2019 those elections will take place, she said.

"On Friday, we will know the date of the elections," Montero said.

Nations push Syria to fill US shoes

MOSCOW (The Washington Post) – The leaders of Russia, Turkey and Iran agreed Thursday on the need to coordinate on eventual arrangements for northeastern Syria after an expected U.S. troop withdrawal, but they remained far apart on what those plans could entail.

The talks in Russia's Black Sea resort town of Sochi underscored the various interests at play in Syria – Russia and Iran as key backers of President Bashar Assad, and Turkey seeking to keep close watch on Syrian Kurds seen by Ankara as potential threats.

The three-way statement – by Russian President Vladimir Putin, Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey and Iran's Hassan Rouhani – also showed concerns over any vacuum caused by President Donald Trump's decision to pull out troops who have been battling the Islamic State in Syria's northeast.

"It is our joint view that the [U.S. withdrawal] is a positive move that will help stabilize this part of Syria, where legitimate government control should eventually be restored," Putin said after the trio met for the latest round of Kremlin-initiated talks aimed at finding a way to end the eight-year conflict.

The three countries, each of which have forces stationed in Syria, agreed to work on a plan for postwar Syria at a 2017 conference in Kazakhstan's capital, Astana, but remain far apart on ways to bring about a final settlement.

Russia and Iran repeated their calls for Syrian government forces to take control there. Erdogan stuck to his intention to create a "safe zone," effectively separating Turkey's border from the Syrian Kurds. Russia said Turkey needed the consent of Assad to create such a zone, Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova told reporters.

Moscow, which entered the Syrian war militarily in 2015, has been cementing its role as the true arbiter of Syria's future, and key power-brokers in the region, including the United States' Syrian Kurdish allies, are looking to the Kremlin for guidance in charting a settlement.

Trump has reversed course on his initial statement in December that U.S. troops would withdraw immediately, later saying that the exit depended on liberating the final pocket of territory controlled by Islamic State. This week, hundreds of people poured out of the area as it became increasingly clear the militants were facing defeat.

The top U.S. commander in the Middle East said this week that the pullout will happen in a matter of weeks, although U.S. officials also want to commit to negotiating a handover agreement before that happens.

Putin said he had not seen any signs on the ground in Syria to suggest that Washington was withdrawing, adding that Trump does not always deliver on his campaign promises.

"The current domestic political situation is such that (Trump) cannot always fulfill his goals. ... But we work on the belief that (the withdrawal) will happen," Putin said.

Illingworth, Ryjanova win Oceania Zonal Chess Championships

By Justin Bennett
For The Guam Daily Post

Hosted by the Guam Chess Federation, or Guam Echecs, a pair of grandmasters dominated the 2019 Guam Oceania Zonal Chess Championships. The six-day tournament concluded on Saturday at the Pacific Star Resort & Spa in Tumon.

"It's a very big deal to hold this tournament," said chief arbiter Robert Gibbons. "It's been a pleasure for everybody to be here. The tournament went really, really well."

Australia's Max Illingworth and Julia Ryjanova, both elite grandmasters, placed first in the men's and women's open divisions, respectively.

Rounding out the podium in the men's open field, Papua New Guinea's Shaun Press placed second, Australia's Clive Ng, third.

Placing fourth, Guam's Enofre Manuel was the top local male finisher.

Starting with a bang, Guam's Felix Lacno, unranked, defeated Illingworth on the tournament's opening day.

Gibbons compared the upset to an unknown tennis player knocking off Roger Federer on the grass at Wimbledon.

"It's 100 to 1 for Max to lose in this kind of field," Gibbons said. "It's really a great win for the other player."

The 70-year-old Lacno said a mistake by Illingworth allowed the Guamanian to win.

"Chess is my game since I was 8 years old," Lacno said.

Undeterred by the upset, Illingworth, a professional chess player, amassed a 7-1-1 record, ultimately taking home a $1,000 cash prize.

"For me, this tournament was a holiday," Illingworth said. "I wasn't too upset with that loss."

With the win, Illingworth qualified for the Fédération Internationale des Échecs World Cup from Sept. 9 to Oct. 2 in Khanty-Mansiysk, Russia. The top two finishers in that tournament qualify for the Candidates Tournament for the World Chess Championship 2020.

It was a "very good week of chess," said Guam Chess Federation President Roger Orio. "The highlight has to be Felix's win on the first day. He shocked the grandmaster."

'A kind of model of life'

Julia Ryjanova steamrolled through the competition, claiming a $750 winner's check. Like her compatriot, Ryjanova also qualified for the World Cup.

What I "most I enjoy about chess, is to win," Ryjanova said. "Chess is a kind of model of life. In chess, like in life, you have choice(s). There are many ways to go and you have to choose which way is the best for you."

Rounding out the women's top spots, Australia's Rebecca Stones placed second, New Zealand's Vyanla Punsalan, third.

Missing the podium by a rung, Guam's Olga Szekely placed fourth.

Guam's Cyle Sarmiento, 13, and Grace Estur, 14, were the two youngest competitors in the tournament.

Sarmiento, in his first-ever competition, received 2 points after beating the oldest player in the tournament, Guam's Leon Ryan.

"It was fun," Sarmiento said. "I was able to get some points and get to play other players."

Estur, a 10th-grader at Harvest Christian Academy, enjoyed making new friends.

"It was great getting to play with people from other countries," Estur said.
