GRTA to seek 10 minibuses

By John O'Connor
john@postguam.com

The Guam Regional Transit Authority will issue an emergency procurement for 10 minibuses to augment its shrinking fleet of vans and buses.

The procurement will be federally funded and is expected to cost more than $1 million, according to interim Executive Manager Celestin Babauta.

GRTA has 12 vans and 11 mid-sized buses but, due to constant use and lack of maintenance, the working fleet is down to five vans and five buses.

There are two other buses from Kloppenburg Enterprises Inc. that allow the agency to service the six para-transit and six fixed routes. Kloppenburg is the bus operations contractor for GRTA.

Babauta said Kloppenburg may have two more buses available for the agency to use.

Maintenance has been a years-long issue for the agency. The agency now has a maintenance contract with Atkins Kroll Guam, Babauta added.

"They are really doing a fantastic job for us," he said.

The 10 new minibuses will allow GRTA to rotate vehicles and avoid overuse, Babauta stated, adding that the agency is finalizing documents that include the specifications and information to send to the Office of the Attorney General, hopefully by Feb. 5.

Mayors wait on recycling funds for cleanup efforts

By John O'Connor
john@postguam.com

There is about $1.3 million waiting in the Recycling Revolving Fund left over from fiscal year 2018. Fund monies are used by mayors to contract recycling companies for the removal and processing of recyclable materials, such as vehicles that are abandoned on the sides of Guam's roads.

The RRF was established to augment the old Abandoned Vehicle and Streetlight Fund, which was deemed insufficient for funding junk car removal, according to a 2015 audit from the Office of Public Accountability.

But the Mayors' Council of Guam has not received any RRF funding to use in fiscal 2019, according to MCOG Executive Director Angel Sablan. The council is waiting on the Guam Environmental Protection Agency, which administers the fund.

According to EPA officials, there was a "slight delay" in ensuring the council receives funding.

RRF monies were not appropriated to the council in fiscal 2019. Instead, the current budget law established continuing appropriations on prior year funding.

The RRF was appropriated in two parts in fiscal 2018.

About $2.9 million from the fund was initially appropriated to GEPA. A chunk of that funding, about $2.2 million, was handed over to the mayors in the same provision. Mayors expended only about $800,000 of their portion of RRF in fiscal 2018.

While the MCOG received a continuing appropriation the following fiscal year, the authority to Guam EPA for the $2.9 million expired at the end of fiscal 2018.

The budget laws for fiscal 2018 and 2019 appeared to contradict each other.

Nick Lee, Guam EPA spokesman, said GEPA is working with the MCOG and Bureau of Budget and Management Research in an effort to comply with both budget acts. This caused an "unintended, slight delay" in ensuring funding could be remitted to mayors, Lee said.

On Jan. 23, the Post confirmed with Lester Carlson, director of Bureau of Budget and Management Research, that leftover RRF funds from 2018 should be available to the MCOG based on continuing appropriations.

While mayors wait on funding, Guam EPA stated it would work with the MCOG to ensure funds are available. A memorandum of understanding has to be approved before funds are remitted. Guam EPA does not expect delays developing the MOU with the MCOG, Lee said.

Contractor availability

However, funding isn't the only issue affecting mayors' ability to collect recyclables around the island.

According to Dededo Mayor and current MCOG President Melissa Savares, contractor availability also weighs on mayors' progress in doing things such as clearing the roadsides of abandoned vehicles.

By law, any company contracted by mayors to perform recycling work must be permitted by Guam EPA. Only a small pool of contractors are available to work on all villages on Guam, Savares said. For example, there are only three contractors licensed to accept abandoned vehicles.

She said, when funding is made available, all 19 mayors will try to get their villages cleared up but they are all working with the same three contractors. "So it takes more time for us to get things done in the village," Savares said.

Savares also hoped RRF funding could be issued earlier. In 2018, the MCOG did not get recycling funds until the end of June, about three months before the end of the fiscal year.

Opposition lawmaker: Venezuela funds transfer blocked

CARACAS (Reuters) - A bank in Portugal has blocked Venezuela's attempt to transfer $1.2 billion to Uruguay, a lawmaker said on Tuesday as the opposition to President Nicolas Maduro warned of the theft of public funds, while the United States sent food and medical aid to the Venezuelan-Colombian border.

Pressure is building on Maduro, a socialist, to resign amid an economic crisis marked by widespread shortages and hyperinflation, with the United States and a growing number of other nations recognizing opposition leader Juan Guaido as Venezuela's legitimate president.

Pope Francis on Tuesday expressed willingness for the Vatican to mediate Venezuela's mounting crisis if both sides seek it. Russia, which along with China has backed Maduro in the crisis, underscored its view that the crisis can be resolved only with negotiations between the government and opposition.

Guaido, who declared himself interim president last month, is scheduled to meet later on Tuesday with business leaders at Venezuela's main business group, Fedecamaras, to discuss an economic recovery plan under a future transition government in the OPEC-member South American country.

Maduro's adversaries have warned that Venezuelan officials are seeking to drain state coffers ahead of a potential change of government.

Portugal-based Novo Banco halted the $1.2 billion transfer of Venezuelan government financial assets to Uruguayan banks, legislator Carlos Paparoni said during a congressional session, a day after Guaido said authorities were trying to move funds.

"I'm pleased to inform the Venezuelan people that this transaction has until now been halted, protecting the resources of all Venezuelans," Paparoni said.

Venezuela's Information Ministry, which handles all media inquiries, did not immediately respond to a request to comment.

Lisbon-based Novo Banco, which is 75 percent-owned by U.S. private equity firm Lone Star Funds, did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

60K data breaches reported under new EU rules

LONDON (Thomson Reuters Foundation) - Almost 60,000 personal data breaches have been reported to Europe's regulators since the EU adopted a landmark privacy law, according to figures published on Tuesday that campaigners said should spur people to think twice about what they share online.

The EU's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) requires organizations holding personal information, such as a person's name, address and religion, to notify authorities when they suffer a breach - or face a hefty fine.

Leaks reported since the law was adopted in May 2018 included anything from major hacks to minor incidents such as an email sent to the wrong address or lost USB stick, according to a study by global law firm DLA Piper. "The GDPR is driving personal data breach out into the open," said Ross McKean, a partner at the firm specializing in cyber and data protection.

Of the 26 countries analyzed, the Netherlands, Germany and Britain reported the most breaches, while Italy, Greece and Romania had the lowest per capita rate of reporting - something that suggested varying levels of compliance, said McKean.

Francisco Vera, an advocacy officer at campaign group Privacy International, said it was hard to tell whether the total number of breaches was unusually high, as it was the first time such figures were available.

"That alone shows how important breach notifications are," he said. "They reinforce accountability of those who are processing our personal data and make consumers aware of the risks they might be facing."

Report: Port's old cranes need replacement

Dontana Keraskes/The Guam Daily Post

By John O'Connor
john@postguam.com

It will cost the Port Authority of Guam $8 million to replace a 30-year-old gantry crane about 13 years ahead of schedule, according to the governor's transition committee.

The transition report referred to a Public Utilities Commission docket from 2017.

According to the report, a 2012 analysis showed Gantry 3 was to be replaced in 2031 at a cost of $13 million. By 2016, the PUC found the replacement had to be accelerated to 2018, at a cost of $8 million, of which $2.4 million would be funded by bond proceeds.

Post files state that in September 2016, the Port Authority board decided to have the crane surveyed. A feasibility study by the agency's technical services contractor, Matson Navigation Corp., found repairing the crane would cost $5.6 million.

"The life expectancy after that refurbishment is not worth the Port Authority to go through, and later on we will be requesting to replace Gantry 3," said then-Deputy General Manager Felix Pangelinan.

Out of service

Gantry 3 is currently out of service due to its deteriorated condition. The crane had little resale value for the port, but it may produce some revenue if sold as scrap metal.

The port's three remaining operational cranes also are in dire need of replacement. The PUC reported those costs to be between $11 million and $12 million.

The transition report stated that acquisition of a new gantry crane was not listed among the Port Authority's budgeted capital improvement projects for fiscal year 2019.

General Manager Rory Respicio, who helped develop the transition report, said the cranes will be replaced one at a time and all cranes will be replaced by 2026.

The agency will have to start going through the procurement process next year, he said.

Trump's ex-fixer to give new Russia details to Congress

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Donald Trump's former personal attorney, Michael Cohen, will tell lawmakers on Wednesday that Trump asked him several times about a proposed skyscraper project in Moscow long after he secured the Republican presidential nomination, a person familiar with the matter told Reuters.

As special counsel Robert Mueller appears to near the end of his probe into whether Russia meddled in the 2016 presidential election in collusion with Trump's campaign, Cohen's assertion that Trump was inquiring about the skyscraper project as late as June 2016, if true, would show Trump remained personally engaged in the venture well into his candidacy.

Cohen was set to offer lawmakers new information about Trump's private affairs over three consecutive days of in-depth discussion with congressional committees that began on Tuesday.

Closed-door hearing

Cohen did not talk to reporters as he arrived on Capitol Hill on Tuesday morning for his first meeting, a closed-door hearing with the Senate Intelligence Committee.

The focus of the session, which was drawing to a close late on Tuesday, was mainly on what Cohen knows about Trump's and associates' dealings with Russia, as well as about Cohen's previous lying to Congress, two congressional sources said.

As Cohen testified, Republican Rep. Matt Gaetz, a Trump ally, suggested in a tweet that there was compromising information about Cohen's private life.

Gaetz later told the Daily Beast that he was not engaging in witness intimidation.

"It is challenging the veracity and character of a witness. We do it every day," he said.

The lawmaker does not sit on the House Oversight Committee, which will be conducting Wednesday's hearing with Cohen, and therefore will not be allowed to ask him questions.

From close aide to 'rat'

Cohen was one of Trump's closest aides and once said he would "take a bullet" for him. But he turned against his former boss last year and is cooperating with prosecutors after pleading guilty to tax evasion, bank fraud and campaign finance violations.

Cohen has said Trump directed him to make hush-money payments to two women who said they had sexual relationships with Trump, in violation of campaign finance laws before the 2016 election.

Trump called Cohen a "rat" after he turned on him, and the White House again attacked Cohen's credibility on Tuesday.

"It's laughable that anyone would take a convicted liar like Cohen at his word, and pathetic to see him given yet another opportunity to spread his lies," White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders said.

Trump has denied any collusion between his campaign and Moscow. Russia denies U.S. intelligence agencies' assertions that it interfered in the election.

Cohen has been disbarred, according to a decision by a New York state appeals court in Manhattan made public on Tuesday. Disbarment is automatic in New York for lawyers convicted of felonies.

Michael Monico, a lawyer for Cohen, did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Epstein's sex abuse victims demand justice

MIAMI (Miami Herald) - Lawyers for victims who were sexually abused as minors by multimillionaire Jeffrey Epstein have formally demanded that the government vacate Epstein's plea deal, void his federal immunity and reopen his sex trafficking investigation, the Miami Herald has learned.

Lawyers Brad Edwards and Paul Cassell, who represent two of Epstein's victims, sent a letter to the U.S. attorney's office for the Southern District of Florida making the request in the wake of a federal judge's ruling last week that the plea deal negotiated with Epstein 11 years ago was illegal.

Top general: No military threat at southern border

WASHINGTON (Roll Call) - The U.S. military commander tasked with defending North America said Tuesday that there is no military threat at the southern border, where President Donald Trump has deployed troops to assist law enforcement in stemming illegal border crossings.

"It is not a military threat," Gen. Terrence J. O'Shaughnessy, who leads U.S. Northern Command, told the Senate Armed Services Committee on Tuesday. He quickly added that doesn't necessarily mean the military should not be involved in the border mission.

But O'Shaughnessy's comments come just hours before a House vote on a resolution to block Trump's Feb. 15 declaration of a national emergency along the border.

Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero wrote, "On 29 September 2017 you acknowledged with the (U.S. Property and Finance Office on Guam) the validity of a debt to the U.S. government in the amount of $26,494.96." An overpaid military housing allowance is considered a debt to the U.S. government.

Aguigui paid the debt back in full on Sept. 29, 2017.

According to Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero's letter, $26,494.96 is the amount of money Aguigui received in overseas housing and cost of living allowance payments between July 2016 and June 2017 while she was earning a degree at the U.S. Army War College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero concluded that Aguigui's "acknowledgment of the debt" and agreement to pay it all back "indicates to me your knowledge that receipt of the sum of $26,494.96 was improper."

Housing allowance

When contacted for comment, Guam National Guard spokeswoman Maj. Josephine Blas referred The Guam Daily Post to David Riano, the attorney adviser of the Guam National Guard.

Riano told the Post that he had been authorized by Aguigui to discuss the letter of reprimand and talk about how it was resolved.

Riano explained that when Aguigui was transferred from Guam to the war college in Pennsylvania she was paid the overseas housing allowance "for some reason, unknown."

The housing allowance on Guam is classified as an overseas housing allowance. It's substantially higher than the allowance paid for stateside military assignments.

"It wasn't anything that she did, and it wasn't anything that the war college did. It just continued to be paid," Riano said.

When Aguigui returned to Guam, the finance office at the Guam Guard "caught [illegible] fact that she was paid the overseas housing allowance, rather than what you get paid in the states, which is called BAH, for basic allowance for housing."

For a Guard member without dependents, at the lowest level pay grade, the current overseas housing allowance for Guam is $2,205 a month. The equivalent basic allowance for housing in Pennsylvania is $1,050.

The overpayment to Aguigui was the subject of a U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division report issued in March 2017.

In that CID report, Aguigui told investigators that she "believed her unit may have been behind in processing personnel actions so she did not inform anyone" about the payments.

The CID report also states that "Aguigui declined the opportunity to undergo a polygraph examination."

Riano said, "That's not unusual."

"As a lawyer, anybody that would come to you as a client and ask whether or not they should take a polygraph, any lawyer worth his salt would say no," Riano said.

'Not a prosecutorial decision'

The CID report states its findings are "not a prosecutorial decision." However, the Guam Army National Guard staff judge advocate "opined probable case exists to believe LTC Aguigui committed the offense of false official statement, larceny of government funds, and pay and allowance fraud."

The CID report was provided to Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero's command for "consideration of action."

Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero agreed with the CID conclusion that the case did not warrant prosecution, writing in his January 2018 letter to Aguigui: "This is an administrative reprimand," adding later, "it's not punishment under the Guam Code of Military Justice."

"There were enough fuzzy areas on this to cast doubt as to whether or not you could actually prove this," Riano said.

In previous years, a number of Guam National Guard members were charged and subsequently entered guilty pleas in federal court for receiving more than the amounts of military housing allowances they were entitled to. Some cases involved Guam Guard members who received the full housing allowance while they had roommates or were living with relatives. For the Guard members who were charged and pleaded guilty, not only did they agree to repay the military, the charges also cost them their jobs.

In response, Riano said he could not "speak for the U.S. attorney or the FBI" when asked why authorities prosecuted some cases and not others. However, he noted: "I don't think a conviction could have come out for larceny."

"There were too many questions," Riano said. "She never requested the money, but she got paid the money."

He pointed out that the Guam Army National Guard bears some responsibility. He said, "It was this command that paid her. We should have known not to pay her."

Still, Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero concluded that Aguigui's "acceptance of these allowances for 12 months while assigned off island demonstrated faulty reasoning and judgment."

Administrative solution

After reviewing Aguigui's response to the reprimand, and the response of her legal counsel, Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero wrote in a letter dated Feb. 13, 2018: "After due consideration, it is my decision to sustain the proposed Letter of Reprimand."

"The letter of reprimand will be filed in the performance portion of your Official Military Personnel File (OMPF) for a period of one year to be followed by its filing of one year in the restricted portion of your OMPF," Maj. Gen. Leon Guerrero wrote.

"The end result of the investigation was an administrative resolution of the matter and a letter of reprimand for bad judgment, which is not uncommon in the military," Riano stated.

people's messes. She recently organized a group of volunteers who worked with Mangilao Mayor Allan Ungacta to clean construction debris, household trash, old tires, and white goods that had been dumped near Thousand Steps, a popular local hiking trail.

"I'm tired of cleaning up after people," she has said, noting that the time and effort given to cleaning up illegal dumpsites could be better spent on other worthwhile community issues.

GEPA is grateful for the volunteers who help keep the island clean.

"We are fully aware that the agency cannot eliminate or reduce the incidence of illegal dumping alone," Lee said.

Unfortunately, and in spite of the education campaigns and the availability of facilities where people can appropriately dispose of garbage, too many people continue to dump their garbage illegally. And, as Tatreau and San Gil pointed out, oftentimes, volunteers' efforts to clean a site are met with more trash.

"For every successful investigation that leads to a citation and a cleanup, we are fully aware that there are more to follow, and with uncertain results," Lee said. "Whether out of ignorance, or lack of willingness or wherewithal, there still remains no good excuse to improperly manage your waste."

Cost of cleaning up

Guam law states: "Littering shall be punishable by a fine of not less than Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) ... Any person convicted of any litter offense may also be required by the Court to pay the cost of removing the litter they caused." There are some who would like to see the fine increased.

Ungacta said mayors don't receive funding for dumping trash at transfer stations or at EPA-certified facilities for white goods and tires.

"It comes out of our funds," he said.

Source: Spanish judge to seek extradition of NKorea embassy intruders

MADRID (Reuters) - A Spanish judge plans to request the extradition from the United States of members of a group he suspects of forcing their way into the North Korean embassy in Madrid and trying to persuade an official there to defect, a judicial source said on Tuesday.

The judge believes a group of 10 intruders identified themselves during the assault as human rights campaigners, according to a Spanish High Court document. The group's leader contacted the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation a few days later to pass on information about the raid, the document said.

The judicial source told Reuters the judge believes all the identified suspects went to the U.S. after the raid and that he would request their extradition to Spain, where they could face up to 28 years in prison.

> "The United States government had nothing to do with this."
> - Robert Palladino, State Department spokesman

State Department spokesman Robert Palladino said the U.S. government was not involved in the raid, which Spanish High Court documents said involved a Mexican citizen who is a U.S. resident and a U.S. citizen, as well as South Korean citizens.

"The United States government had nothing to do with this," Palladino told a regular news briefing, stressing that the U.S. called for the protection of all embassies.

He referred questions about the investigation to Spanish authorities. The State Department did not respond immediately to a request for comment about the extradition request.

The FBI said in a statement it was "our standard practice to neither confirm nor deny the existence of an investigation," adding that the agency had a strong working relationship with Spanish law enforcement partners.

Spain's Interior Ministry previously had said police were investigating an incident at the embassy on Feb. 22 but gave no details, except to say that a North Korean citizen had been injured and that no one had filed a complaint.

A Mexican citizen who is a U.S. resident, identified as Adrian Hong Chang, led the group, the Spanish High Court said in the document, based on the investigation of the incident. The court identified the U.S. citizen as Sam Ryu.

The group stole computers, hard disks and pen drives, according to the document. It was not clear how the court knew that Hong Chang had contacted the FBI.

Three of the intruders took an embassy official into the basement and encouraged him to defect from North Korea. They identified themselves as members of a group which campaigned for the "liberation of North Korea," the document said.

A dissident organization called Cheollima Civil Defense acknowledged on its website late on Tuesday that it was behind the incident, but said it was not an attack and that the group had been invited into the embassy.

Cheollima, also known as Free Joseon, said no one was gagged or beaten and that no governments were involved.

It said identifying individuals involved would "aid and abet the regime in Pyongyang." It did not acknowledge any of the names in the court's indictment.

May urged to discuss 'departure' plans with Conservative lawmakers

LONDON (Tribune News Service) - An influential lawmaker from British Prime Minister Theresa May's Conservatives urged her to make a statement at a crucial meeting on Wednesday on when she plans to step down, to help persuade rebels in the party to back her Brexit deal.

Nigel Evans

Nigel Evans, a joint executive secretary of the 1922 Committee of the party's 314 lawmakers, told the BBC that he had encouraged May "to give the timetable for her departure" in a planned speech to the group late Wednesday afternoon.

"A number of Brexiteers are reluctant to support her deal because they think, if it gets over the line, she will then say, 'Look what I've achieved, I'm staying,'" Evans told the broadcaster.

"A number of them want to make absolutely certain she's nowhere near the negotiating table when we start talking about the future trade relationship with the EU," he added.

"If the prime minister announces a timetable of departure, I think that's going to swing a lot of people behind her deal. We could get it over the line."

May promised in December to step down as party leader before the next general election, scheduled for mid-2022, but most Conservative lawmakers expect her to leave her post long before then.

She met her Cabinet earlier Tuesday as she tried to save the Brexit deal she has agreed with the EU, ahead of planned "indicative votes" on alternatives by lawmakers from Wednesday.

Mueller complained about characterization of Russia investigation

MUELLER: Special counsel Robert Mueller walks past the White House after attending St. John's Episcopal Church for morning services on April 21. Cliff Owen/ Minneapolis Star Tribune/ Tribune News Service

WASHINGTON (Los Angeles Times) - Special counsel Robert S. Mueller III complained to Attorney General William Barr that Barr's initial letter to Congress about the Russia investigation did not "fully capture the context, nature and substance of this office's work and conclusions," a Justice Department official said Tuesday.

Mueller also wrote that Barr's four-page letter on March 24, two days after Mueller had filed his final report, sowed "public confusion about critical aspects of the results of our investigation," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss the internal debate.

The special counsel's protest, filed in a letter to Barr on March 27, reflects clear tension between the special counsel and the attorney general over Barr's handling of Mueller's 448-page report into Russia's interference in the 2016 election and potential obstruction of justice by President Donald Trump.

The existence of Mueller's letter was first reported by The Washington Post.

Barr is expected to be grilled Wednesday by Democrats at a hearing before the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee that will delve into his handling of Mueller's report, as well as the attorney general's conclusion that Trump did not obstruct justice.

Barr is also sure to be questioned about his comments at an April 18 news conference that put Trump's actions in a favorable light.

When he received Mueller's letter on March 27, Barr spoke to Mueller by phone, according to Justice Department spokeswoman Kerri Kupec.

"In a cordial and professional conversation, the special counsel emphasized that nothing in the attorney general's March 24 letter was inaccurate or misleading," Kupec said in a statement. "But, he expressed frustration over the lack of context and the resulting media coverage regarding the special counsel's obstruction analysis."

Mueller sought to convince the attorney general to release portions of the report so the public could understand the special counsel's reasoning. But Barr declined, saying it would be better to release the entire redacted report, not put it out in piecemeal fashion.

In Barr's earlier letter to Congress, he said Mueller "did not find that the Trump campaign, or anyone associated with it, conspired or coordinated with the Russian government in" its efforts to stoke division over social media or to hack Democratic computers and release troves of internal documents and emails.

He also wrote that Mueller's report did not conclude that the president had committed a crime related to obstructing federal investigators but it also hadn't exonerated him of those allegations.

However, Barr wrote, he had made a determination "that the evidence developed during the special counsel's investigation is not sufficient to establish that the president committed an obstruction-of-justice offense."

The letter did not disclose that Mueller had concluded that the Trump campaign "expected to benefit" from the emails stolen from Democrats. The special counsel also laid out "substantial evidence" of multiple instances when Trump acted with the intent of constraining or undermining the investigation then underway.

In his report, Mueller did not conclude whether Trump had committed the crime of obstructing justice, noting that Justice Department guidelines bar sitting presidents from facing charges. However, he wrote, the special counsel would not be precluded from saying Trump was innocent of such allegations.

"If we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the president clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state," he wrote. "Based on the facts and the applicable legal standards, however, we are unable to reach that judgment."

19-year-old pleads not guilty in synagogue shooting

SAN DIEGO (Reuters) - A 19-year-old man accused of killing one worshipper and wounding three others in a shooting spree in a California synagogue pleaded not guilty on Tuesday to murder and attempted-murder charges in an attack prosecutors are treating as a hate crime.

John Earnest, arrested shortly after Saturday's bloodshed at the Chabad of Poway synagogue north of San Diego, also pleaded not guilty to a single count of arson on a house of worship stemming from a nearby mosque that was set on fire in March.

Appearing behind a glass partition for his arraignment in San Diego County Superior Court on Tuesday afternoon, Earnest stood expressionless and spoke faintly as he gave one-word answers to procedural questions put to him by the judge.

The lanky defendant - a nursing student enrolled at California State University at San Marcos - wore dark-rimmed glasses with his hair combed straight forward.

Ordering him to remain held without bail, Judge Joseph Brannigan said Earnest would pose "an obvious and extraordinary risk" to the public if he were to be released pending trial.

The proceeding was attended by six Hasidic Jewish men who sat in the front row of the courtroom, dressed in the traditional dark garb of the Jewish ultra-Orthodox faithful.

Authorities said Earnest stalked into the Poway synagogue during Sabbath prayers on the last day of the weeklong Jewish Passover holiday and opened fire with an assault-style rifle, killing 60-year-old worshipper Lori Gilbert-Kaye.

Three others were wounded in the attack, including the rabbi, who was shot in the hand and lost an index finger.

Micronesian groups join cleanup

Dozens of volunteers from various Micronesian organizations spent Saturday morning cleaning up trash illegally dumped along the Okkodo pipeline from Artero Drive to Chalan Kareta in Dededo.

Among the groups that took part were the Chuuk Association of Guam, the FSM Association of Guam, Foneni Achocho Sensu, the Weno Association of Guam, ECC Association of Guam, the University of Guam Chuukese Student Association, and the Iron Wood Kids.

FSM Consul General Theresa Filipin took part, along with FSM Association of Guam President Cassanova Nakamura.

Sen. Clynt Ridgell and his staff organized the cleanup. He plans to make them a regular part of his office's effort to combat illegal dumping on island.

26, was charged with theft by receiving and violation of a court order.

On Thursday, police issued a call-out to the community to help locate the pair, along with William Garnafingin Yamnang, 36.

William Garnafingin Yamnang

Investigators said the trio were wanted for questioning following a rash of robberies and thefts, and are considered armed and dangerous.

Police have yet to release any details about the two who were captured.

It's unclear if police have leads on Yamnang, also known at Billy Yam Yam. His last known address is Jose Sudo Street in Yona but he is known to frequent Merizo, police stated.

looking at situations where children end up as wards of the state.

"We work closely with agencies when there's an arrest made and that person is the primary caregiver for the kids in the home," Tapao said. "We work with (Child Protective Services) and other agencies and community organizations to make sure the kids have a safe place to go."

Tapao said the first choice is always other family members. However, he has seen where the closest family member simply can't take care of another child — or children — in addition to their own.

"Unfortunately, we sometimes reach out to a brother or sister and there's either hesitation or they just come out and say they can't take these kids in 'cause they can't afford it. ... That's a legitimate concern," he said.

In other instances, the closest family member is someone known to have a substance abuse problem and officials can't be certain the person is able to provide for the kids.

"That's when we reach out and let CPS know – and they have no choice but to try to place them in a shelter or some other care," Tapao said.

"As long as there are crimes being committed and drugs on the street ... our kids end up victims – no matter how you look at it," he said.

Where they go

The increasing number of foster children without a corresponding increase in licensed foster homes means the popular political phrase of "it takes a village" has to be practiced.

The Alee Shelter can take up to 12 children and it is usually full, Iwashita said.

Altogether, there are 21 children in group homes, including the Alee Shelter and Sanctuary Inc.

There are 52 in licensed foster homes.

There are 60 children who remain with their parents.

There are 101 children with relatives.

"And the rest are with nonrelatives, like friends of families. Some are in treatment facilities, mental facilities, and some are in the Department of Youth Affairs," she said.

Become a foster parent

Iwashita said while these group homes and shelters do help and provide a lot of much-needed support for Guam's kids, officials are always ready to welcome foster parents.

Officials have tried to ease the requirements that ultimately have made the process cumbersome. While most people understand the need for scrutiny, there's a concern that the process has become so arduous it's caused people to hesitate or outright change their minds about becoming foster parents.

Iwashita said she tries to work with families as efficiently as possible and get all of the paperwork done in about two months. Unfortunately, that might take longer in some instances, including families who live off island. She has to work with the government offices in those jurisdictions to get the clearances and other documents necessary, which could add at least a couple of weeks to the process.

What many people don't know, she said, is that there are different types of foster parenting, including those who take children just for a few days out of the week, helping during the summer months or able to do emergency foster care for a few days at a time.

law enforcement agency to undergo a tactical tracking level. It enhances their capabilities," said DOC Deputy Director Joey Terlaje. "If an individual was to run away from law enforcement, their goal is to track the individual down and make the apprehension."

He was one of the training instructors.

"When you look at tactical tracking, it's very universal. It could not only be used for making the apprehension but also search and rescue," he said. "They are able to rely and count on each other in working together. I feel Guam is 12 more officers safer in as far as terroristic conduct and illegal immigrants."

Terlaje said the training helped him during the early part of his 25-year law enforcement career. He recalled using the skill to track down illegal immigrants on Guam who were on the run from authorities in the early 1990s.

"We had an influx of illegal immigrants into our island. I was down in Umatac and I came across a police officer who just apprehended four Chinese illegal immigrants and I just stumbled across the guys on the road. I got down and I checked with the officer if he needed assistance," he said. "He told me there was five immigrants that are still at large and ran. When he pointed it out, I looked at the tracks and the trail. It's because of my training, we were later able apprehend the five illegal immigrants that were at large."

It's training done to save lives that he said came at no cost to the department.

"I was excited. At DOC, with the shortage of manpower, it's hard to be switched out for training, so when they said I was selected I jumped on it," said corrections officer 1 Jaerica Sanchez. "Without the tactical tracking skills and training, I wouldn't know what to look for or how to make that apprehension as quick as we did."

Terlaje said the plan is to offer this training to others in law enforcement.
