DOCOMO PACIFIC launches 5G on Guam

DOCOMO PACIFIC said Tuesday it's the first company to commercially launch 5G in the Marianas.

The new 5G service is available in Tamuning and Hagåtña, the company said.

In March, DOCOMO PACIFIC introduced the island's first 5G Open Lab, allowing local and worldwide partners to test and co-create practical solutions in a 5G environment.

Also in March, NTT DOCOMO and Sony announced a plan to hold tests on Guam for a driverless concept car.

5G Open Lab offers a way for tech companies to test their service or products using some of the fastest online speeds, the company said.

UNITED AIRLINES EMBRACES STAR WARS THEME

United Airlines announced it has teamed up with "Star Wars: The Rise of Skywalker" – the epic conclusion of the Skywalker saga, to offer customers and employees alike "exciting opportunities in the coming weeks to experience the Star Wars saga firsthand on the ground and in the air.

"Customers will begin flying the friendly galaxy in November when United officially unveils an all-new Star Wars-themed paint design on one of its Boeing 737-800 aircraft with a redesigned onboard experience to celebrate the movie," the airline stated.

The airline also will offer "Star Wars: The Rise of Skywalker"-themed amenity kits and launch its latest inflight safety demonstration video featuring characters from the new film. In addition, the airline will provide once-in-a-lifetime opportunities for MileagePlus members – including access to attend the U.S. premiere of "Star Wars: The Rise of Skywalker" – through MileagePlus Exclusives, the airline's platform that lets MileagePlus members use miles to bid and buy exclusive items and experiences.

"United Airlines and the Star Wars franchise share a common goal: Connect people and unite the world," Mark Krolick, United's vice president of marketing, said in a press release.

United commits $40M toward sustainability investment

United Airlines announced Tuesday it is committing $40 million toward a new investment vehicle focused on accelerating the development of sustainable aviation fuels and other decarbonization technologies.

The carrier, which earlier this year agreed to purchase up to 10 million gallons of sustainable aviation fuel over the next two years, will look to collaborate with other environmentally conscious partners on this extraordinary initiative, the airline announced in a press release. Among all airlines around the world, United holds more than 50% of all publicly announced purchase commitments to using sustainable aviation fuels and is the only U.S. carrier to currently use this fuel on a continuous basis, the airline stated. (Daily Post Staff)

Firefighters slowly contain CA wildfire

CONTAINED: A car burns after catching on fire alongside the 101 highway in Los Angeles, Calif., Nov. 1. Mike Blake/Reuters

(Reuters) – Firefighters working overnight to contain a Southern California wildfire made significant headway on Sunday, containing 50% of the blaze with the aid of cooler weather and lighter winds after it burned thousands of acres of dry brush and farmland.

The Maria Fire – which broke out on Thursday near the community of Santa Paula, about 70 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles – had destroyed two structures and burned more than 9,400 acres, the Ventura County Fire Department said on Sunday.

"Overnight, firefighters continued to patrol the fire perimeter extinguishing any remaining hot spots. Fire behavior was moderated due to cooler temperatures and lighter winds," the department said in a statement.

All evacuation orders were lifted on Saturday, when the fire department said the blaze was 20% contained. More than 10,000 residents had been told to evacuate at the peak of the fire's rapid spread.

Southern California Edison has told state authorities that 13 minutes before the fire started, it began to re-energize a circuit near where flames first erupted, said a spokesman for the utility, Ron Gales.

Southern California Edison had shut off power in the area because of concerns that an electrical mishap could spark a wildfire. The utility and fire officials have said the cause of the blaze is still under investigation.

Strong, dry desert winds have fueled the Maria Fire and a number of other destructive wildfires across the state this fall.

The largest blaze, the Kincade Fire in Sonoma County north of San Francisco, was 76% contained on Sunday after burning nearly 80,000 acres and destroying more than 370 structures since it started on Oct. 23, officials said.

Washington tribe saves sacred land from development

SACRED: Visitors photograph Snoqualmie Falls, a 270-foot-high waterfall east of Seattle, where tribal leaders announced a deal on Nov. 1 to block development of the surrounding land which is considered sacred by the tribe. Richard Read/Los Angeles Times/Tribune News Service

SNOQUALMIE, Wash. (Tribune News Service) – For years, Native Americans who revere a towering waterfall in the misty hills east of Seattle have opposed construction of a subdivision, hotel and convention center on surrounding land they hold sacred.

Members of the Snoqualmie Tribe prayed, collected signatures and appealed to Congress. Their struggles to preserve the Snoqualmie Falls land mirrored more widely known attempts by Native Americans to protect sacred sites, such as protests against the Dakota Access Pipeline and a giant telescope planned on Hawaii's Mauna Kea mountain.

On Friday, Snoqualmie tribal leaders stood in sunshine by the roaring falls and announced a deal with the Muckleshoot Indian Tribe, which agreed to part with surrounding land, canceling construction. In the $125 million pact inked Thursday, the Snoqualmie Tribe bought the Salish Lodge & Spa, which will continue operating at its perch above the falls, as well as 45 acres where the housing, hotel and convention center would have gone.

Tribal elders spoke with emotion of acquiring and conserving the land where their ancestors were buried. The falls and the town of Snoqualmie gained fame during the 1990s in scenes from the "Twin Peaks" television series, much of which was shot in the community 30 miles from Seattle.

"We have reclaimed our most sacred and traditional land," said Snoqualmie Tribal Chairman Robert de los Angeles. "We have taken another step toward healing the desecration of this area."

The Snoqualmie Tribe was one of the largest in the Puget Sound region, with about 4,000 members, when its leaders joined other chiefs who signed an 1855 treaty with the U.S. government. Its members dispersed. The Snoqualmie people lost federal recognition as a tribe in 1953, but regained the status in 1999.

The tribe now has about 500 members, many of whom live outside the region, and operates a casino opened in 2008 on reservation land.

The larger Muckleshoot Tribe is based southwest of Snoqualmie on a reservation near Auburn, Wash. The Muckleshoots outbid the Snoqualmie Tribe in 2007 when they bought the acreage by the falls and Salish Lodge, an 86-room hotel that began in 1916 as a small inn.

Snoqualmie tribal members objected in 2015 when the city built a traffic roundabout on land they also consider sacred near the falls, which attract about 2 million visitors a year. The road construction project unearthed a spear point estimated to be thousands of years old.
